EDNA PLANT IDEA—W. L. Garner, Carding Department, Edna Plant, Reidsville, recently suggested a rack to be used by card grinders when covering drums and traverse rollers. He received a cash award from Cone Mills Corporation for his useful suggestion.

Tabardrey Increases Perfect Attendance

Tabardrey Plant had a total of 44 persons who did not miss a single day of work during 1953. Among this group there were seven who did not miss a day for two years and one who did not miss a day for three years. This showed a sharp improvement over 1952 when there were only 10 persons who had a perfect attendance record.

Arthur Makin, plant manager, has sent the following letter to the perfect attendance employees:

"I have just learned that you are one of the employees of the Tabardrey Plant who had a perfect attendance record for the year 1952 and 1953.

"You can well be proud of your accomplishment. Your regular attendance has contributed much to the success of our plant operations during the past year.

"I would like to extend congratulations to you and tell you how much we appreciate your loyalty and sincere interest in your job.

"Best wishes for your health and perfect attendance in 1954.

"Sincerely,
Arthur Makin, manager."

WON'T YOU GIVE?—Sanders Burcham, son of Rev. and Mrs. S. M. Burcham, 715 Chestnut Street, has been a patient at Central Carolina Convalescent Hospital since last August 18. This boy is representative of hundreds whose future depends largely on the contributions you make to the March of Dimes. Employees of Cone Mills may donate funds through overseers or assistant overseers until January 31. Money collected in the annual drive goes to provide care for patients at the hospital and to further research in ways to stamp out infantile paralysis.

It Makes You Think and Think

(One night last week I went on my usual monthly visit to Carolina Convalescent Hospital with a group of three from Greensboro Junior Woman's Club. We go to tell stories, show motion pictures or just talk to the little boys under six who are in polio's early convalescent stages.—L.N.M.)

After you have been in this polio convalescent ward for only a few minutes, you feel as if these tiny boys are the ones bringing cheer to you rather than you to them.

There's Buster, a handsome colored boy, who tells you about the dog he has at home, yet he can't for all his four years tell you where his home is. Even though Buster, like all the other little white and black boys there, is fastened by shoulders and ankles with the not too tight strips on his gown, he tries to turn over on his back when he says, "Me want to hug oo." And when you lean over and feel that weak little hug he gives you, a total stranger, you know a little of the strong hug of a healthy baby his mother and dad must be missing in their home.

Then there's Jimmy, a pale little blond. He's so shy that it makes you feel the same way. He just lies there on his stomach smiling sweetly and listening to the other children as they shout greetings to the visitors. But if you just take a little time with Jimmy, you find that underneath all that shyness is a real little boy who is just as thrilled as the next one to be having company in the hospital.

"What's you name? What's you name?" You hear shouted from the little white iron beds. Then the conversations start. And almost always, they're about a home they haven't seen in months, Mother or Dad or some kitty or pup. And you are stumped for words when one tiny curly head says, "Oh, I thought you were my Mommie."

Watching a little old cartoon movie is such fun at the polio hospital, especially when they haven't been out of bed in months and months, though it is kind of awkward laughing so hard lying on their tummies.

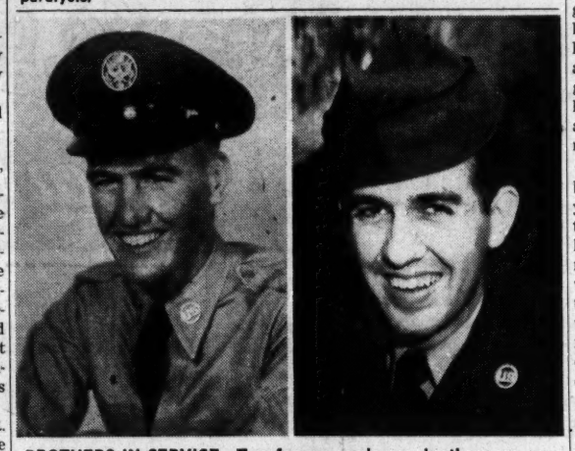
Wasn't that Woody Woodpecker the funniest thing!" you overhear two little chaps lisp. And they laugh and laugh over the antics of that silly little bird, just a line drawing who can do more than they can do... but no more than they hope to do someday.

Some of the children had progressed from this ward to another; some had been released for home. Yet there were many of those same little faces who were there on the first visit months ago, still smiling still remembering and telling about home, even though you can hardly translate their baby talk into adult English.

One newcomer to this room you can't help but notice is a little Negro boy, about five years old. The reason he is so noticeable is that his is the only rocking bed in the room. (There are whole rooms of rocking beds elsewhere in the hospital.) This child with braced arm and leg is the life of the party, laughing, talking and even singing as his bed rocks rapidly, head up, feet down, head down, feet up. And you wonder how he stands that motion all day and night, but you're thankful someone discovered that such a bed would keep him breathing, just as you're thankful for all that other equipment, those iron lungs and respirators, no matter how expensive, that in many cases have brought back life.

And you wonder too as this rocking boy yells, "Goodbye old sissy britches!" as you leave to walk down the white corridor past room after room of important little hopes of many homes, what you would do if this terrible thing should strike in your own home. It makes you think and think.

SAFETY COMMITTEE SUGGESTION—Those new drip pans in the Dry Can room at Proximity are the result of one of the recommendations made by the Safety Committee. W. L. Hunter, Overseer of the Finishing Department and Rossie Maness, Can Room Fixer, admire the new pans which keep oil off the floor—thus helping to prevent accidents. A number of other improvements have been made at the suggestion of the Safety Committee.



BROTHERS IN SERVICE—Two former employees, brothers are now in service. They are A 2/c Donald A. Steele, and A 1/c Robert W. Steele, sons of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Steele of Sumner School Road. Donald is with the 483rd Air Force Squadron in Japan where he has been for the past three months. He has been in service for 18 months. Robert is with the 3080th Air Force Squadron, Caribou Air Force Station at Limestone, Maine. He has been there for the past 19 months. Both were formerly employed in the Finishing Department of Revolution Flannel Plant. Their father is now employed in the Napping Department there.

More Than An Extra Slice Today

Students of the President's State of the Union message are beginning to dig beneath the surface and are uncovering a deep-seated significance to the administration's planning.

It is now apparent that the administration is thinking beyond the immediate present and is interesting itself in a somewhat evolutionary plan for the eventual development of a sound and more economical approach to our domestic problems.

If we go back to President Franklin D. Roosevelt's proposals when he first came into office, even he recognized most of them as emergency methods of procedure. He himself stated on several different occasions that a part of his sponsored legislation was for the purpose of taking care of the immediate problems, and that they should be recognized only as emergency legislation which should be eliminated as soon as the emergency had passed.

History will record that his administration did not follow through on the basis of emergency legislation but developed from them a new form of procedure which brought government more and more into the domestic economic picture.

For quite a good many years a good many economists — in fact, most of them who might be considered "middle of the road" or conservative economists—have deplored the trend away from sound economic reasoning. They have felt that a continuation of this trend could only lead to some type of socialism or regimented government - controlled economy which would more and more render the population dependent upon government and top level political machinery.

The present administration evidently believes that the country needs to be put on a sounder basis for free economy such as is consistent with the true concept of our American government and its relations with individual citizens.

The administration evidently realizes that all transitions from the developments during the past twenty years cannot be properly accomplished overnight by drastic legislation which would involve radical departures from existing practices. For that reason, some of the administration's proposals now call for a constructive plan for a movement towards sounder economic principles which will give to the citizenship a wider latitude for self-control and regulation. It is felt that one of the prime purposes is to gradually give back to the other governing bodies and the citizenship more of their past recognized rights, thus lessening the power of centralized government.

It is important that groups of citizens, because of their common interests, should study carefully the full meaning of the proposals by the administration. The acceptance or rejection of the administration's policies should not be considered in the light of partisanship or sectionalism or on the basis of their immediate effects.

We should be big enough to look beyond temporary panaceas which might become very destructive over a long period of time.

In a period of transition, care should be taken to avoid bringing disaster to any group. For that reason, we feel that the administration is wise in not trying to accomplish overnight what it conscientiously believes should be eventually accomplished. At the same time, this administration, or any administration that is convinced that it is to the eventual best interest to the people of the country to regain better control over their affairs and to insure against autocracy in government by reversing the recent past trend toward socialism, should develop a well- considered plan for such accomplishment. This plan must be a realistic one calling for timely changes which will not radically upset existing conditions.

The people owe it to themselves to adopt a long range perspective.

Freedom tomorrow is worth a lot more than an extra slice of bread today.

Why the President Said No

(GROVER CLEVELAND, FEBRUARY 16, 1887)

I RETURN WITHOUT MY APPROVAL House bill No. 10203, entitled "An act to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation (of $10,000) therefor."

It is represented that a long-continued and extensive drougnt has existed in certain portions of the State of Texas, resulting in a failure of crops and consequent distress and destitution.

Though there has been some difference in statements concerning the extent of the people's needs in the localities thus affected, there seems to be no doubt that there has existed a condition calling for relief; and I am willing to believe that, notwithstanding the aid already furnished, a donation of seed grain to the farmers located in this region, to enable them to put in new crops, would serve to avert a continuance or return of an unfortunate blight.

And yet I feel obliged to withhold my approval of the plan, as proposed by this bill, to indulge a benevolent and charitable sentiment through the appropriation of public funds for that purpose.

I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution, and I do not believe that the power and duty of the General Government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit. A prevalent tendency to disregard the limited mission of this power and duty should, I think, be steadfastly resisted, to the end that the lesson should be constantly enforced that though the people support the Government the Government should not support the people. (Emphasis added.)

The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can always be relied upon to relieve their fellow-citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence among our people of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthens the bonds of a common brotherhood.

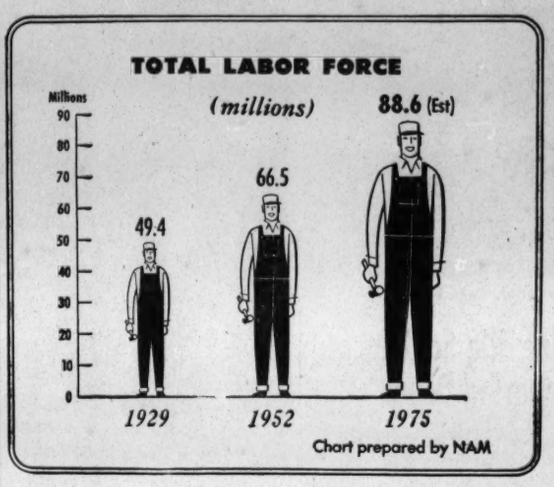
How To Make 22 Million More Jobs!

MILLIONS OF MORE JOBS NEEDED BY 1975



We're growing fast. By 1975 our population will be an estimated 33 million larger than today. This means a labor force of 88.6 million—or 22 million new jobs needed for America's breadwinners in the next two decades or so.

At today's $12,000 average investment behind each job, it would take some $265 billion of additional investment for plants, tools and equipment needed to provide these 22 million more jobs.

The billions required must come, as in the past, from individual savings plus the plowing back of earnings by American business.

The chief obstacle to job-creating business expansion is a tax system which impedes the savings and investment needed.

It is important for all citizens to know what taxes have to do with tomorrow's jobs.

Polio Virus Found In Blood

Further evidence that polio virus may be present in the blood of persons during the early stages of polio infection was discovered recently by March of Dimes-supported scientists at Yale University.

The finding encourages the belief that a polio vaccine, when tested, may prove successful in preventing the disease by stimulating the body to produce its own protective antibodies in the blood which will then block the entrance of virus into vital nerve cells.

Working under a research grant from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Drs. Dorothy Horstmann and Robert W. McCollum of Yale University's School of Medicine went to a small Ohio town which was in the throes of a polio epidemic. For their study they selected the "W" family, consisting of mother, father and four children aged 10, 4, 3, and 2 years.

Although the family had had no known contact with an actual polio patient, the three older children complained of minor illnessses with slight fever, sore throat and stomach upsets. In a few days all the children recovered completely. Doctors considered the systems typical of "abortive polio" and not the paralytic disease.

Just about when these systems were disappearing, the Yale doctors took specimens of blood, stool and throat secretions from all four children. Using tissue culture test tubes as well as monkeys, the scientists carefully examined all specimens for the presence of polio virus.

Soon they had the surprising answer—all samples, including the blood, contained virus. Thus the investigators had further evidence that during the early stages of polio infection, polio may be present in the blood.

However, scientists caution that they are still not certain of the exact route polio virus travels in the body to reach the nerve cells where it causes damage resulting in paralysis. They point out that if the virus travels only along nerve pathways to reach the vital nerve cells, then the problem of protecting against polio through vaccination will be more difficult. However, if the virus does pass through the blood on its way to the nerve cells, they believe that only small amounts of antibodies would be needed in the blood to meet and block the virus from going on to the nervous system. Vaccination, they point out, should stimulate the development of those important antibodies.

How March Of Dimes Got Its Name

Eddie Cantor is credited with naming the March of Dimes. It happened November 22, 1937. Cantor and several other prominent residents of Southern California were meeting to consider ways and means of getting an infantile paralysis fund-raising drive started.

Cantor began by suggesting 30-second nationwide radio broadcasts to promote the drive.

He suggested the money be sent directly to the White House and the others thought the idea was excellent.

Then Cantor began pacing up and down, thinking. After a few seconds he stopped, turned to the group and said: "We could call it the MARCH OF DIMES."

Everyone in the group approved immediately and from that day forward polio fund raising for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis never has known any other name.
